Question 14 Answer
To me, the Second Amendment represents more than the right to own a firearm. It represents personal freedom, personal responsibility, and the recognition that every law-abiding citizen has the inherent right to protect themselves, their family, and their property.

Our constitutional rights are not granted by government—they are protected by it. The Second Amendment reminds us that liberty and responsibility go hand in hand and that Americans should not have to depend solely on the government or local law enforcement for protection. I should have the immediate right to defend myself, my home, and those I love, without the burden of time, which could compromise our lives at the hands of someone with ill intentions.

The Second Amendment reflects our nation's founding principle that freedom belongs to the people, not the government and it should be protected at all cost.
